PICTON DAWN CHORUS

Kiwibank Awards Second Grant

By Siobain Browning (PDC Coordinator)

Have you got your predator trap for your garden yet? If not, we are very pleased to announce that Kiwibank are providing a second grant to allow us to heavily subsidise traps for gardens in the Picton Dawn Chorus project area! This time, we will be able to sell the traps from our "pop-up" shop which will open in mid-June. A flyer will be arriving in your letter box soon with all the details and you will be able to find more details on our website.

Goodnature traps will be for sale for $85 (normally $160) and Goodnature are kindly donating counters again. Boxed rat traps will be for sale for $10 (normally $20). We have a limited number of traps at these Kiwibank subsidised prices, so be ready for the opening in June!

Image thanks to Nga Manu Images.

Communities all over the country are now stepping up their urban predator control efforts. Did you know that Wellington has several suburbs that are rat free, or which are well on their way to being rat free? Wouldn't it be great if Picton could be rat free too? And, if protecting our native birds isn't enough of a reason for you to bother trapping, have a think about this:

This winter is the third mast year in a row. That means that high seed production has provided a bumper food source for rodents and their numbers are extremely high. However, as the natural food source declines again with the onset of winter, rats and mice are looking for warmth and alternative food sources. This is when they are more likely to move in to your house, garage or even car. If they get in to your house they will target wires and pipes and can cause extensive (and often unseen) damage. And the chances are, that a standard household insurance policy will not cover the cost of rodent damage!

So, if you haven't already got a trap – make sure you get one. Then keep it set and baited! You will be doing yourself, your neighbours and the birds a favour.

AUTUMN

Leaves litter the ground, a sea of red, green and orange. More softly drift down, a stream feeding the sea.

My fire roars, more orange than the most orange leaves on the ground.

Big, strong trees, once lush and green, are now bare and grey.

Birds are collecting twigs to keep them warm in winter, occasionally fighting over the perfect twig.

I sink back into my cosy armchair, and close my eyes. My fluffy clothes push up against me, adding to my cosy-ness. Wind whistles through the open fireplace, making me shiver for a second. The wind leaves and I regain my cosy-ness. The back of the armchair embraces me, giving me a hug.

I smell cooking from my mums hot lunch. I smell smoke, from the fire, probably. The smell of salty air comes squirming it's way into the house and to my nose. I smell my cat, Nui, which just jumped onto my lap.

My mum brings in some lunch, hot mince on toast and sprinkled with cheese. I take a bite and the taste of cheese, toast and mince reaches my tastebuds. It reminds me of breakfast. I taste some apple skin, once lodged between my teeth, now pushed free. The sweet and sour taste of apple skin goes well with my lunch.

The crackle of my neighbours car turning round in the leaves reaches my ears. The popping and rustling of my chickens looking through the leaves does too. A light pitter patter of rain sounds like stones on my tin roof. I hear the clickety-clack of my mum's computer as she writes her novel, occasionally stopping so she can read it. The deep purr of my cat indicates that it is happy, and so am I.

RECOVERY

Supporting people in recovery can be challenging.

New Zealand Red Cross can help. We are offering your workplace a free Recovery Matters workshop (valued at $1,000) to give your organisation effective strategies and methods that will enable you to better support your colleagues and your clients.

This workshop:

- explains how stress affects you, your colleagues and clients
- gives you practical tips to understand and support yourself and others through the recovery process

“The workshop gave us the opportunity to explore how we offer psychosocial support during stressful situations. It offered a comprehensive insight into understanding and responding appropriately to many of the emotions people experience during traumatic times.

Thank you, Red Cross, for the opportunity to explore the less tangible aspects of our work with your friendly, experienced trainers.”
